Biographical/Historical Note

Autographomania, the enthusiastic collection of autographs, was a fashionable pastime in the late 19th-century. Autograph collectors actively sought signatures from past and present notable figures, who distinguished themselves through a life of politics, literature, music, theology, education, and military leadership. There was a visceral feeling tied to standing in the presence of, or holding, a document signed in the hand of a revered individual, and this was the primary motivation for autograph collectors of this time. <sup>1</sup>
